

The Stitchlinks Wall Hanging

To mark our first birthday
January 2007

Once upon a time back in October 2006 when the seasons were changing and here in the northern hemisphere the daylight hours were shortening, we realised that some of our members had begun to experience worsening symptoms.

Contributions were posted to Sockfairy from the UK, Spain, Germany and Australia.

She then worked her magic to create our stunning birthday wall-hanging.

So thank you Sockfairy for waving your magic wand at a time when people needed a bit of extra sparkle in their lives.

Moods were lower and pain more pronounced with the thought of the winter ahead.

Sockfairy noticed this from her chats on the Forum, so hatched a brilliant plan to cheer everyone up and form firm friendships.

She set a task to create a wall-hanging to celebrate Stitchlinks' birthday on January 23rd 2007.

Members were asked to knit, stitch or crochet a three or six inch square on the subject of 'Something about me'.

A tag with a comment from the stitcher would be attached to each square.

You'll see from the following pages how people rose to this challenge and enjoyed working as a team.

Every square shows commitment and careful thought right down to each individual stitch and the accompanying comments are very moving.

Thank you Stitchlinks and Stitching through some very mad and interesting times

Cross stitch, quilting and knitting are all great for keeping pain, the knowing it is hot or cold out of my thoughts and are a boon for those down in dumps days.

Stitchinks is a godsend and brings not only great information and helps but also new friends who have been (and are still) 'there' and who love to offer help and support.

In my retirement stitching brings me great pleasure and relaxation but for my daughter, Sue, it is a life line helping her to forget the severe back pain that she suffers. Stitchlinks helps to unite the many sufferers and create plenty of smiling faces.
just like the pansies. Shirley .

My Stitchlinks friends are like a rainbow,
always brightening
up the darkest days.
